"The ombudsman also asked the Sindh excise and taxation department to extend and improve the service delivery and also suggested it to integrate the system with the National Database and Registration Authority (Nadra) for biometric and related facilities in the public interest," it said.

In March, the Sindh government had stopped issuing yellow number plates for vehicles' registration after the new number plates with the security feature were introduced for the vehicle owners. The new registration plates are retro-reflective, which glow at the night and bear the ajrak design a, the traditional shawl of Sindh that represents its culture. The National Radio and Telecommunications Corporation helped the Sindh government in launching the new plates.

Over growing complaints of non-issuance of the new number plates, the Sindh ombudsman also asked for immediate measures to address the grievances of vehicle owners and curb the corrupt practices.

"The ombudsman also directed the Sindh excise department to prepare a feasibility regarding setting up of desks and one-window offices at different places to facilitate the people," said the statement.

"He also suggested bringing the registered motor dealers into the system to curb the corrupt practices. The excise department has also been directed to submit the report about the progress within one month," it added.
